

Dear Mayor Daley,

In Chicago, I would like places where you can go with RC toys and play with them. I would like that because it brings kids together and lets them make new friends. Also, in a small way, it would make a miniature city. It would make a miniature city by putting a city ground with streets, sidewalks, and buildings.

So in that way, you have made your city so it really looks like a tiny city in a big city. I think that anyone here would like this idea. These are some ways that the Chicagoans would enjoy this idea. First, you can meet other people at these places. Second, people will be able to fly and drive all their RC cars, planes, and helicopters.

I am sure that people will really like it. I am completely sure about that. Here is what I am asking and saying to you. First, who doesn't like RC toys? Second, who doesn't like miniature cities to drive and fly in? Third, if somebody doesn't like it, why go there? So you can charge a fee, but only up to one dollar, or people will never go there.

Please listen to this idea. If there are more attractions, more tourists will come. Which will get Chicago more money. More people who come will have more people come to Chicago which will give Chicago more praise.
