

Involve students to build citizenship.

The following pages are examples of surveys your students can take to learn more about how to make school-community progress.

Taking surveys is just the beginning of kinds of questions to ask about the school and actions they can take. As students collect information, have them tally it in tables and make graphs. Ask them to write reports on their findings. That will be a service to the school. You will find guides to service learning

After students complete the surveys of parents, other students, and community members, they should prepare a report that you include in the plans you make for your school's progress.

If you continue to involve students in school progress surveys and service learning each quarter, you will build citizenship and skills.

Student Survey: My Progress, My Community's Progress

This is one way I help other students at school.	This is one way I help my school.	This is what I hope to do in the future.
What I like best about going to school is <input type="checkbox"/> learning a lot <input type="checkbox"/> being with my friends <input type="checkbox"/> working hard <input type="checkbox"/> how my teacher helps me	This is the one best way I know to make sure I learn at school	This is a way I help my community now.
This is why it is important to learn at school.	This is a way I can improve the work I do at school.	This is a way I want to help people in the community.

Parent Survey: How can we help?

What do you hope your child will do in the future?	What is the best way to make sure that the trip to school is safe?	What can parents do to help each other?
What can parents do to get students to do more homework?	What can parents do to help children get more exercise?	What can parents do to help children learn more about their city?
What suggestion do you have for getting students to do more homework?	What is a good way to involve more parents in the school?	What can parents do to help children take more responsibility for helping the community?