

Mr. Mayor Daley,

I've been thinking of an idea called City Pets. I think they're a good idea because people could feel wildlife right out of their door.

The problem is that it will cost money, volunteers, and training. The City pets will be trained not to bite, to stay on sidewalks, and not take food from the ground or from people. The very cool part is that they could be any animal. To make sure people are okay with having a City pet on their street, they could sign a form. One of the people on the block would sign a form so you could build a small house with food in it for the City pets.

Trust me, people will like them,

Lincoln elem.
