Dear Mr. Mayor,

I would like to tell you some issues that are going on in Chicago. One of the big issues is gas prices. They're too high. I would like to give you some details about the issue.

The first reason is that I can describe how things can be better if you lowered gas prices. Like if you lowered gas prices more people will go because it won't be that expensive.

The second reason is that fewer people will be spending their money. Everyday people all over the world spend their money on shopping out for dinner and all those things. But for every gallon of gas they get a penny flies out of their pocket.

The third reason is that more people will come to gas stations if you lowered prices. Maybe 20 people or so. But more people will come to gas stations if you lowered prices.

The forth reason is that travelers won't have to travel more miles because the prices are way too high. Travelers probably hate that.

The final reason is that you could build a toy store so that they would stop for gas and a toy.

Please fix the problem.
