A Community Changes
CCSSR1: Read closely, then make logical inferences.
CCSSR2: Summarize a passage, then identify the central idea.

How do people change a community?

Pilsen is an old community in Chicago with a long history. This part of Chicago started small and got bigger, as most neighborhoods in the city did. Its cultural history is about moving, changing, and connecting. Many people have moved there over the decades. This movement started when immigrants chose to settle in this part of the city when Chicago was growing rapidly. An immigrant is a person who moves from one country to another. Pilsen’s first people spoke German. They had moved from Germany. If you go to Pilsen today you will see some of the places they built. But when they first moved there, it had just a few homes. Then immigrants continued to migrate there, newcomers moved to Pilsen so they could be near people who came from the same country.

Many immigrants found homes and jobs in Pilsen, and it was a time of challenge and change for them. They had to figure out how to live in the new country. They had to find a place to live, and they needed employment for income. They worked on railroads and on docks along the Chicago River, loading and unloading lumber, and in factories, too. They had a lot to do to make a home in their new country, it was not easy to accomplish the changes. Cooperation and collaboration were important for the progress of each family and the whole community.

The newcomers built churches, created gardens, opened stores, and set up newspapers. The newspapers were published in their own language, and they were a way to educate the newcomers about their own community and the city through articles and editorials. Many entrepreneurs opened businesses, and soon the community was bustling. Some social workers supported this progress, they guided the immigrants who kept coming to the community. They set up settlement houses, where people could learn English and get help finding work and housing. But then there was movement out of the community, it was a local migration to suburbs and other parts of the city. People were looking for more opportunities. As the population declined, businesses closed.

Then there was another movement into Pilsen, which you’ll see a symbol of if you go to 1831 South Racine today. There you will find Casa Aztlan, which is a Mexican-American center. About 50 years ago, many Mexican-Americans moved to Pilsen from another part of Chicago—so the community was renewed. They liked the buildings, they wanted to create a Mexican-American community. They joined the churches of Pilsen. To avoid conflict, leaders of the Mexican Americans and European Americans talked about ways to collaborate to continue Pilsen’s progress. One way the two groups worked together was to create, which are enormous paintings on walls. Pilsen has many beautiful murals created during that period. When you see those murals you will notice that there are symbols of Germany and other European countries as well as representations of Mexican history. They are inter-cultural art that represents the connections that were made through that collaboration.

Pilsen used to be called the “Heart of Chicago” when people first settled there, then there was an exodus. But through the second migration, it became the “Heart of Chicago” again, this time for families from Mexico. People opened businesses, and Mexican American community groups supported the community’s families. Now as in the past there still are organizations that help people who move to this part of Chicago.

A heritage is a legacy, it comes from the past and influences the present. The Mexican Americans have a rich heritage from their own country and from their experience in Pilsen. Each August, the community has a special day. It is the Fiesta Del Sol, a gathering that includes the Mexican Americans and people from all over the metropolitan area. People who used to live in Pilsen return come and see the changes. They see their own heritage, as well, in the murals.

Think Clearly
• What is a choice someone makes in this history? What are effects of that choice?
• What is the most important event? Why do you think it is most important?
• What is the main idea of this passage?
• Underline five sentences in the passage that support that idea.

Write What You Think
List reasons why someone would start a community center to help people.

______________________________

______________________________

______________________________

______________________________

______________________________

Write a paragraph about how a community center helps a neighborhood.